The 1.5-litre petrol engine is also pretty noisy; peak power and torque don't arrive until you're high up in the rev range, which means it needs to be worked hard if you want to do anything other than pootle. The hybrid, which combines a 1.5-litre petrol engine with an electric motor, is better.

The 2.0 TDI is still a great option for high mileage users, since it'll still be usefully more economical than the petrol 1.5 TFSI and it's a pleasure to drive - punchy and (by diesel standards) smooth. The 1.6 TDI will be a touch more economical, but it's noisier and a bit harder work generally than the 2.0-litre.
